

Problems that could derail your project

Communication is fading

Without clear transparency of your project, and regular progress discussions, people stop talking about your project and fade away.

Losing team momentum

Your team are tired and can't see the benefits of prioritising your project above their daily workload

Resources are running away

Are you struggling to find capacity and capability for your project? Is your project manager inexperienced? This means you're much more likely to run into an avalanche of problems. E.g.

- Shifting project scope
- Unrealistic deadlines
- Inaccurate project estimates (e.g. time, budget, other resources)

Lost sight of objectives

If you don't measure your objectives and key milestones, how do you know whether your project is on track?

A change of priorities within your organisation may also threaten your project.
